From inn to sober house

New use proposed for mansion
By Mollee Francisco

For the past eight years, Chaska’s historic C.H. Klein mansion has housed the Peacock Inn and the city has considered turning it into a sober living facility. The City Square Park mansion, once owned by the Klein brothers, local brickyard and bank magnates, was both donated to the city over 40 years ago.

On Jan. 24, City Administrator Matt Podhradsky told the council that there is a proposal to turn the C.H. Klein mansion into a sober living facility.

At one point, the building served as the Chaska Public Library. In 1999, it was leased to Joyce and Jens Bohn for $250,000 worth of property.

Two of downtown Chaska’s most stable historic mansions are in need of new occupants.

C.H. Klein mansion currently houses the Peacock Inn and Breakfast. The city will consider a proposal to sublease the space as a sober living facility in the next few months.

Learning to confront bullies
Town Hall meeting this Saturday
By Chuck Friedbauer

The Chaska Police Department is sponsoring a Town Hall meeting to address bullying at the Chaska Community Center this Saturday.

The Town Hall meeting is an excellent example of using all a community’s resources to stand up to bullying,” said Chaska Police Officer and school resource officer Trent Wurtz. “We’re trying to prevent tragedies from occurring, whether it’s at a school, home or in a neighborhood.”

Several community leaders and experts from the metro area, including human rights activist and keynote speaker Virginia Klevorn, will present bullying information at the event. They’ll be sharing ideas and communicating with school members.

Klevorn, keynote speaker at Town Hall forum on bullying, is vowing to stand up to bullying. “We need to stand up to bullying,” said Klevorn. “We need to say ‘no’.”

Klevorn’s background in human rights work and her educational pursuits have prepared her to present bullying information at the event.

Klevorn, a graduate of St. Louis University, holds a degree in business administration, specializing in human rights and civility in Belgium and Brazil.

She graduated from St. Louis University with a degree in human rights and civility in Belgium and Brazil. She’s spent eight years advocating for education, human rights and civility in Belgium and Brazil.

Park land purchased tabled by Chaska Herald

On Monday, the Chaska City Council voted 5-1 in favor of purchasing 109 acres of land from thegoto company. The purchase price was $10 million, and the city will need to reserve $800,000 in the general fund and any other necessary funds to complete the purchase. The council's decision was based on the potential for development of the land, which includes the future site of a new Chaska city park.

Polities

Stay the course

Ernie Leidiger is doing precisely what the people of Carver County elected him to do. That is, he wants to lower taxes by reducing the size of state government, and he wants to bring in financial realities to the Local government. He is a vote of confidence for the people of Carver County.

The State of Minnesota is in deep financial trouble. As sad as it may be, this is a fact we have to face. If we do nothing about it, we will end up with fewer services and higher taxes. This is the legacy left to Minnesotans by free spending liberals who have saddled future generations with this bill.

This is the legacy left to Minnesotans by free spending liberals who have saddled future generations with this bill. The only way to avoid this is to return Minnesota to the fiscal discipline and wise management by the State and City of Chaska.

It is a sad day when the newspapers are reduced to calling for a continuation of the political corruption that has created the present problem.

It is time for bold and decisive action. If you agree with Ernie Leidinger, please write to him at P.O. Box 123, Chaska, MN 55318.
The slow process of immigrant assimilation

Civility

The need in today’s world is for increased interaction and understanding between all groups. This is a core value for the community . It is almost an infrastructure-type process and the benefits it can provide are incalculable. I would like to share some thoughts on this subject that can occur to share costs is always a good idea. Again, the more partnering we can do, the better off we will be.

The master plan for Athletic Park is Chaska’s vision for its future. This park itself. Although optimizing the park experience, it will also provide for our community .

A new master plan for Athletic Park was recently developed, which calls for elements such as trails, a playground, dugout park and plaza.

There are many stories over the years about Peak Fire Department and their support of the community and the value it has placed on being an active and supportive part of the Chaska Community. For those that look at the Chaska Volunteer Fire Department and the community it serves, one need only say thanks to the firemen, past and present, for their dedicated service and support of the community and for everyone in the area.

Sheehy is former Chaska mayor. For that opportunity we can all be thankful.

Diversity

In the past, the concept of “Europeans” may have referred to a process of assimilation. To elaborate, they take their heritage, their values, their cultural values, and their family to the next level. We cannot take for granted that they are assimilated. There are still many who are not part of our mainstream culture.

Turkey sanctuary

By Mark W. Olson

A neighborhood in Chaska has gone to the birds.

Like clockwork, a flock of about 15 wild turkeys frequent Jeff Kerfeld’s Shadow Wood Court home twice a day – at 11 a.m., then 2:30 p.m. They’ve visited so often that the backyard snow is trampled down with turkey tracks, and you can spot turkey trails throughout the neighborhood.

One of their destinations is Kerfeld’s backyard birdfeeders. They’ve learned how to jump up and knock seeds out of the four-foot-tall birdfeeders, Kerfeld said. When not looking for birdseed, the turkeys are scratching the ground looking for seeds, pecking at sumac bushes, or just sunning themselves.

“You don’t even know they’re there – if it wasn’t for a dog barking out the window at them.” That dog would be the Kerfeld’s cairn terrier, Dodger. He’ll just sit there and look at them, Kerfeld said. “It’s his own little wildlife area,” he added, as Dodger let out a bark in the background.

The turkeys, which include 13 males and two females, have familiarized themselves enough with the neighborhood to develop a little swagger. “One of the neighbors said there were four of them walking down the middle of the road,” Kerfeld said. “They wouldn’t get out of the way.” After a horn honk, they waddled off to the side.

“They’ll wonder through the whole neighborhood,” he said.

It’s not the first time Chaska has been frequented by the wild birds. There was the Stella the Turkey controversy of 2001 when a Minnesota State Patrol officer killed a wild turkey that had become a neighborhood mascot. Or the time, in spring 2009, when a wild turkey broke into the Mittelsted’s home and trashed a bedroom. Just last year Nathan Raser shot the 10th largest wild turkey ever registered in Minnesota off of County Road 140.

So far, they haven’t been a nuisance, Kerfeld said. He’s enjoyed watching them with his wife and their three children. “For our kids, it’s cool to be that close to nature,” he said.

He’s also learned a little bit about turkey behavior. “You realize a little bit about pecking order – no pun intended,” Kerfeld said.

Kerfeld guesses that construction to the north of his neighborhood is pushing them into the Shadow Wood neighborhood.

Kerfeld is no stranger to wild turkeys, hunting them every spring near Winona. However, finding them in his backyard has proved easier than finding them in the wild. Kerfeld notes that a recent rise in bagging a turkey is only about 25 percent.
